Rules:

The inquirer, with their eyes shut, holds the pointer tip above the chart while an unmarried person turns the diagram in three complete rotations, either clockwise or counter-clockwise; that is at the discretion of the person doing the turning. The inquirer brings the pointer tip down on the chart and whatever feather the pointer lands on is their answer.

If they miss the Bird of Paradise altogether on the first try, they may try again, but no more than two attempts are permitted. If in two tries, the inquirer lands on no feather, then they must wait a week before attempting to consult the chart again. If a week later, two tries results in no answer being chosen, then the inquirer must wait 45 days before attempting to consult the Bird of Paradise again.
